

Processing HCI

From what I can tell about Lean UX, it is an approach in which you are required to be fast in terms of creating solutions for the user and also being collaborative across teams. Now, could I consider that my team uses this Lean UX approach? I would say not at all, in terms of teamwork, sometimes we did the tasks individually but we received feedback as a group. The comments we made regarding the work of the other members was essential to improve and correct areas of opportunity and thus deliver a collaborative work; but in other sections we were not fast, since the time we took sometimes exceeded the time proposed in our calendar, besides that we were not pending between the work of our colleagues as to know if the procedure they were following was correct. As for other aspects of Lean UX, we created our objective, performed user research, among others. In conclusion, this work is helping us to know how to use certain approaches that we did not use before either by inexperience or ignorance, thanks to this we can acquire more knowledge to be able to have job opportunities in our field.

Reference

1. Interaction Design Foundation – “A Simple Introduction to Lean UX” Interaction Design Foundation – IxDF. <https://www.interaction-design.org/literature/article/a-simple-introduction-to-lean-ux> (accessed Mar. 31, 2024)